1. On the southern embankment of the Leningrad approach channel near the entrance from Kronshtadt, there was a camouflaged radar or gun position. Although the emplacement was dug in the embankment, it was impossible to hide the antennas. 25X1
2. Approximately eight kilometers beyond Petrodvorets (N 59-53, E 29-54), on the route to Leningrad, 25X1
a yellow barracks, and on the flat terrain near the water, there were eight to ten long-barreled antiaircraft guns and five or six smaller twin-barreled antiaircraft guns in trenches. All the guns were covered with tarpaulins, but neither the barracks nor the gun positions were camouflaged. Military personnel was observed moving between the barracks and the gun emplacement. 25X1
3. 25X1
many military personnel on the streets of the town but saw no marching units. Military personnel of both army and navy were usually transported in large open trucks. Officers from both services were clean and wore good uniforms, but the enlisted personnel give the impression of being extremely dirty.
